Racine County
County Executive Jonathan Delagrave announced today the launch of "Here to Help," a proactive effort to reach families who are facing barriers to services due to the COVID-19 outbreak. Staff are reaching out to families who have been involved with county assistance programs to address whether their essential needs are being met. These needs include rent, food, and other basic financial needs; access to resources such as shelter and free meals; mental health counseling; unemployment services; and – importantly – personal safety, including domestic violence and child abuse and neglect. The Racine County/RAMAC task force on reopening businesses -- called "Rebound Racine County" -- held its second meeting today via teleconference. The task force includes a diverse mix of representatives from businesses, nonprofits, government and public health. The group is expected to produce recommendations by next week on how local businesses can reopen safely.
